

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. SYNTAX

WITH EXERCISES.

THE SIMPLE SENTENCE.

a. A Simple Sentence is the expression of a simple thought.

b. That of which something is said is called the Subject. The Subject must be a Substantive, or something which can take its place.

The following can take the place of a Substantive :—

- | | |
|------------------|-------------------|
| 1. An Adjective. | 3. An Infinitive. |
| 2. A Pronoun. | 4. A Clause. |

c. A Clause is a sentence which cannot stand by itself.

d. The Finite Verb which declares what is said of the Subject is called the Predicate.

Instead of the Finite Verb we often find the Copula or link (some part of the verb sum), and a word (called the Complement) linked by it to the Subject, both together forming the Predicate.

Some other verbs link the Complement to the Subject; such as, fiō, I become, nascōr, I am born, videōr, I seem, and verbs of calling, making, thinking, in the Passive Voice.

e. Some Verbs (called Transitive), require an object to complete the sense.

f. Every sentence in English or Latin must contain a Subject and Predicate, and can be analysed in the following form :—

Subject.	Predicate.
Socrates	docet
Socrates	teaches
	 {
	Copula.	Complement.
Socrates	erat	sapiens
Socrates	was	a wise man

With an object—

Subject.	Predicate.
	Verb.	Object.
Socrates	docebat	iuvenes
Socrates	used to teach	young men

With Adverbial Expressions (Extension of Predicate) qualifying the Verb—

Subject.	Predicate.
	Verb.	Object.	Extension.
Socrates	docebat	iuvenes	Athenis
Socrates	used to teach	young men	at Athens

Exercise 1.

AGREEMENT OF ADJECTIVE.

An Adjective or Participle agrees in Gender, Number, and Case with the Substantive which it describes.

'Very' is often a sign of the Superlative.

1. Bona regina. 2. Fortes milites. 3. Longae hastae. 4. Parvorum puerorum. 5. Vir bonus. 6. Bonam uxorem. 7. Cari parentes. 8. Cara patria. 9. Magnis deabus. 10. Docti pueri. 11. Dulcius carmen. 12. Rex amatus. 13. Levi opere. 14. Maximorum regum. 15. Atrocis proelii.

1. A-short letter. 2. Of-a-wise father. 3. To-a-fortified city. 4. Great gifts. 5. Of-a-good queen. 6. A-brave soldier. 7. Great cities. 8. Of-the-black slave. 9. To-the-beautiful sister. 10. Of-the-green grass. 11. Of-useful works. 12. By-the-sharp sword. 13. Sweet songs. 14. A-very-wise man. 15. A-shorter song.

Exercise 2.

AGREEMENT OF VERB.

A Verb Finite agrees with the Nominative of its Subject in Number and Person.

The word which answers to the question 'Who?' or 'What?' is the Nominative Case to the Verb.

If a Pronoun is the subject, it is usually understood.

1. Mater amat. 2. Puer audit. 3. Rex vocabat. 4. Dux regit.
5. Pater monebat. 6. Matres amantur. 7. Cives reguntur. 8. Vox audita est. 9. Milites pugnauerant. 10. Hostes vincuntur. 11.
Magister docebat. 12. Puer discit. 13. Laudavimus. 14. Regina laudabit. 15. Urbs munita erat.

1. Trees grow. 2. They-have-been-called. 3. The-spears wound.
4. The-kings are-praising. 5. The-soldier will-have-fought. 6. The-city is-being-fortified. 7. The-enemies have-been-conquered. 8. The-enemy will-be-conquered. 9. The-boys were-calling. 10. The-soldier is-fighting. 11. The-soldier was-fighting. 12. The-girls had-danced. 13. The-master walks. 14. The-boys are-being-taught.
15. The-girl is-praised.

Exercise 3.

APPOSITION.

a. If two or more Substantives refer to or describe the same thing they are put in the same case. This is called Apposition.

b. When two Substantives not referring to the same thing come together, the latter is put in the Genitive, and generally has the sign 'of' in English.

The Verb, etc., sometimes agrees with the word in apposition.

1. Urbs Roma. 2. Pyrenaei montes. 3. Romulus rex. 4. Flumen Tanesis. 5. Philosophi morum magistri sunt. 6. Philosophia morum magistra est. 7. Romulus Remi frater erat. 8. Roma urbs est antiquissima. 9. Libri nostra gaudia sunt. 10. Oppidum Gabii captum est. 11. Thebae, urbs validissima, Boeotiae caput est. 12. Aurum res pretiosa est. 13. Vos iudices estis. 14. Dolor est magnum malum. 15. Avus eius praetor erat.

1. Of-the-city (of) Rome. 2. For-King Romulus. 3. Of-the-river Tiber. 4. Hope is the-expectation of-good. 5. Caius is our father. 6. The-Nile is a-very-great river. 7. Britain is an-island. 8. Athens is the-capital of-Attica. 9. Gold, the-cause of-crime, has been found. 10. Pompeius will-be-made general. 11. The-sun, a-great-light, is shining. 12. He-was-made praetor and consul. 13. Horses are useful animals. 14. Experience is the-best mistress. 15. The-town of Gabii will be taken.

Exercise 4.

RECAPITULATORY.

If the subject consists of more than one person, words applying to them are put in the Plural.

1. Servus timebat. 2. Puellae caneant. 3. Britannia est patria nostra. 4. Bona lex lata est. 5. Arbores crescant. 6. Epistola scribebatur. 7. Opus confectum est. 8. Grave onus relictum erat. 9. Boni pueri, discipuli nostri, laudabantur. 10. Urbs Roma incensa est. 11. Sidera micabant. 12. Velox cervus currebat. 13. Aurum et argentum, optima dona, missa sunt. 14. Fortissimi milites pugnabant. 15. Patres matresque amantur.

1. To-learn is useful. 2. Brutus, the-consul, was-sent. 3. The-Tiber is a-great river. 4. The-city of-Carthage was-destroyed. 5. Good gifts are very-useful. 6. To-read well is difficult. 7. A-great battle was-being-fought. 8. Catiline, a-wicked man, was-condemned. 9. Brave men are-always praised. 10. Iron is useful. 11. The-master was-reading. 12. The time was very-short. 13. These books are easier. 14. Augustus, the-emperor of-Rome, is dead. 15. Caesar and Brutus are dead.

Exercise 5.

RECAPITULATORY.

Verbs agree with the First Person rather than with the Second, and with the Second rather than with the Third.

1. Ego et Cicero valemus. 2. Tu et Tullia valetis. 3. Urbs Roma bene munita est. 4. Multae epistolae scriptae sunt. 5. Fortes milites laudabuntur. 6. Nos pueri felicissimi sumus. 7. Numa, rex Romanorum, vir erat sapientissimus. 8. Maxima dona missa erunt. 9. Carmina pulcherrima cantantur. 10. Tuus canis amissus est. 11. Magister irascitur. 12. Hostium exercitus fusus est. 13. Athenae urbs pulcherrima erat. 14. Ignavi milites non laudabuntur. 15. Socrates, philosophus doctissimus, mortuus est.

1. Happy boys are playing. 2. The walls of this town are very high. 3. We consuls are wanting. 4. The cowardly soldiers would have fled. 5. Manlius, a Roman soldier, was wounded. 6. Archimedes, a very wise man, was killed. 7. You and your son are happy. 8. A most loving wife was weeping. 9. You and I will come hither, my friend Brutus. 10. This river is called the Thames. 11. Sparta is the capital of Laconia. 12. Brutus, the consul, had fled. 13. This girl, my sister, will come very quickly. 14. A disgraceful crime was being committed. 15. The cavalry and infantry of the enemy were defeated.

Exercise 6.

RECAPITULATORY.

Adjectives agree with the Masculine rather than with the Feminine.

1. Numantia urbs quotidie diripitur. 2. Signa inferuntur. 3. Galli manserant. 4. Requiescat Italia. 5. Brutus Caiusque, consules Romani, veniebant. 6. Gramen est viride. 7. Amavissemus. 8. Tu vicisti, ego vincam. 9. Exercitus noster devictus erat. 10. Tu vales, ego quoque valeo. 11. Iuba, rex fortissimus, captus est. 12. Consul fio. 13. Certior facta est. 14. Regereinus. 15. Frater et soror pulcherrimi sunt.

1. My father and mother are dead. 2. I am the cause of this war. 3. He is the master of these learned boys. 4. Camillus was called the father of his country. 5. The Belgae are the bravest of the Gauls. 6. The battle had begun. 7. Many beautiful girls were standing around. 8. The camp was being attacked. 9. Sparta, the capital of Laconia, is being besieged. 10. Caesar, the leader of the Romans, is coming. 11. This beautiful city will be laid waste. 12. Saguntum, a wealthy city, is being plundered. 13. Lions are very fierce animals. 14. Very many fishes were being caught. 15. A loud voice might have been heard.

Exercise 7.

RECAPITULATORY.

If the things are lifeless, the Adjectives are often neuter.

1. Caius et Balbus eo profecti erant. 2. Aurum et argentum pretiosissima sunt. 3. Ego et tu redibimus. 4. Tarquinius rex vocatus est Superbus. 5. Diu erat anceps fortuna belli. 6. 1. Gates and walls will have been broken. 2. You and your wife are very wicked. 3. His opinion will soon be changed. 4. A great quantity of gold has been found. 5. Riches, honour, glory, are very pleasant things. 6. The enemy is running away. 7. These towns will have been fortified. 8. This city will be plundered and burnt. 9. The island of Cyprus is very rich. 10. A disgraceful crime had been punished. 11. Both we and our children are poor. 12. Better gifts will have been sent. 13. The kings will be wise. 14. Romulus and Remus were brothers. 15. All the burdens are very heavy.

Exercise 8.

QUESTIONS.

In questions the Verb is usually in the Indicative.

In addition to the note of interrogation, there must be an interrogative word.

If the answer 'yes' is expected, use nonne.

If the answer 'no' is expected, use num.

If merely information is required, use ne.

Ne cannot stand by itself; it is always joined to the end of the first word of the sentence.

Whether—or, to be translated by utrum—an.

'Whether' is often omitted in English; for example, we say, 'Is he poor or not?' The Latins say, 'Whether is he poor or not?'

1. Quis es? 2. Num huc venies? 3. Num hoc utile est? 4. Egone sum fortis? 5. Quota hora est? 6. Quot sunt milites? 7. Utrum Galli sunt an Romani? 8. Quid vis, mi fili? 9. Uter horum victor erit? 10. Nonne fortes erant? 11. Num totum opus confectum est? 12. Nonne aurum et argentum pretiosa sunt? 13. Nonne fortiter pugnabamus? 14. Utrum dives est annon? 15. Quale fuit negotium?

1. Who are you? 2. Are not fathers and mothers loved? 3. Who is the leader of this army? 4. Was the town of Gabii taken? 5. Was not the money paid? 6. Is she not beautiful? 7. Are you rich or poor? 8. Is he poor or not? 9. Did he come to-day? 10. What o'clock was it? 11. Who was Caesar? 12. How many sailors were there? 13. Are crocodiles fishes? 14. When will the Romans come? 15. Were not the Gauls conquered?

Exercise 9.

COMMANDS.

In Commands use the Imperative Mood.

If there is a Negative, the Perfect Conjunctive of the Second Person must be used ; the Present Conjunctive of other persons.

Translate 'not' in Negative Commands by nē.

1. Amamini. 2. Monemini. 3. Ne recti sitis. 4. Ne fugiant hostes. 5. Ne cucurreris. 6. Huc veni celeriter. 7. Pecunia ne solvatur. 8. Monentor. 9. Regitote. 10. Italia et Aegyptus, provinciae ditissimae, vastentur. 11. Oppidum Gabii diripiatur. 12. Veni, mi fili. 13. Ne mentiti sitis. 14. Captivi interficiantur. 15. Ne timueritis.

1. Love thou. 2. Don't love. 3. Rule ye. 4. Do not rule. 5. Let me go. 6. Let me not go. 7. Let them not be warned. 8. Hear ye. 9. Let them escape. 10. Let Caesar and Brutus be slain. 11. Be ye not conquered. 12. Let Italy at length rest. 13. Let these rich cities be plundered. 14. Soldiers, fight bravely. 15. Do not set out to-day.

Exercise 10.

THE ACCUSATIVE.

Transitive Verbs govern an Accusative of the object.

The object of a Verb can be discovered by asking the question 'whom?' or 'what?'

1. Latrones magnam praedam abstulerunt. 2. Caesar equites praemisit. 3. Hostium exercitum devicimus. 4. Latronis manus vinximus. 5. Audi meam vocem, mi fili. 6. Deum veneramur. 7. Ne hoc feceris. 8. Servi agros colebant. 9. Nonne hostes aciem instruxerunt? 10. Quid habes, mi care frater? 11. Omnes libros amisistis. 12. Sextus, Tarquinius Superbi filius, urbem ceperat. 13. Audistine vocem meam? 14. Romam non videmus. 15. Altissima moenia urbem muniunt. 16. Patrem suum imitabitur.

1. The master teaches the boys. 2. The boys hear the master. 3. She had written a long letter. 4. Are you writing a letter? 5. Do not kill me. 6. She was singing sweet songs. 7. God created us. 14. Romulus built the walls of the city of Rome. 15. They had written very many letters.

Exercise 11.

THE DOUBLE ACCUSATIVE.

Some Verbs take two Accusatives, especially

a. Those of asking and teaching.

(In the Passive Voice these retain one Accusative.)

b. Those of making, calling, thinking.

1. Nihil me rogavit. 2. Hoc te rogo. 3. Filium suum literas docuit. 4. Pacem te poscimus omnes. 5. Filiam suam Claudiam vocavit. 6. Cur te literas doceam? 7. Rogor sententiam. 8. Te sapientem puto. 9. Primus me auxilium orabit. 10. Nonne nos multa hodie docuisti? 11. Te facimus, Fortuna, Deam. 12. Nunquam divitias deos rogavi. 13. Rogatus sententiam, nihil respondit. 14. Cur hanc artem doceri vis? 15. Milites Caium salutaverunt imperatorem.

1. I shall pray Neptunus for help. 2. Do not teach me letters. 3. Do you call me citizen? 4. The people elected Caesar consul. 5. The king asked the citizens for money. 6. I call you a robber. 7. He called his son Horatius. 8. Being asked for her opinion she said this. 9. Why should you be taught letters to-day? 10. Socrates used to teach philosophy to his disciples. 11. He was asked for advice. 12. Ceres taught the husbandmen useful arts. 13. Will you teach me this? 14. They call Antonius a traitor. 15. He taught me much.

Exercise 12.

PREPOSITIONS WITH ACCUSATIVE.

These Prepositions govern the Accusative :—

ante	cis	iuxta	propter
apud	contra	ob	per
ad	intra	penes	secundum
adversus	erga	pone	supra
circum	extra	post	versus
circa	infra	praeter	ultra
citra	intra	prope	trans

Super, subter, in, sub, implying motion.

1. Apud me vivebat. 2. Quidam coniurationem adversus Caesarem inierunt. 3. Circa urbem erant agri fertilissimi. 4. Arma ob hanc rationem sumpserunt. 5. In ur̄ em se receperunt. 6. Cicero contra Catilinam locutus est. 7. Castra extra urbem posuit. 8. Ne hoc attuleris in nostram domum. 9. Urbs penes hostem fuit. 10. Propter hanc causam in fugam se contulit. 11. Caius ad me venerat. 12. The camp was pitched outside the city. 15. They fled within the walls.

Exercise 13.

MOTION.

The place whither one goes is put in the Accusative, with the Prepositions in or ad.

The Preposition is omitted if it is either the name of a town or a small island, or the words domum (home), rus (country).

1. Regulus Carthaginem rediit. 2. In Africam discesserat. 3. Curio in Africam copias suas transvexerat. 4. Ite domum. 5. Legati in castra Hasdrubalis venerunt. 6. Iter in Galliam longum et difficile erat. 7. Rus ibo. 8. In forum redibimus. 9. Graecorum exercitus Troiam ivit. 10. Ad urbem venerant. 11. Ad Iovis aedem se contulit. 12. Gallorum nonnulli in Asiam pervenerant. 13. Lesbum abiit. 14. Caesar in Italiam rediit. 15. Sextus in Hispaniam solus mox redibit.

1. The chiefs of the senate fled to Africa. 2. They will go quickly to Greece. 3. I shall return home. 4. Will you not go to the country? 5. Don't go to Rome. 6. Did Caesar return to Italy? 7. He sent gifts to the priest of Jupiter. 13. The head of Hasdrubal was thrown into the camp. 14. Will you go home or not? 15. Why did you return to the country? 16. They fled to Brutus.

Exercise 14.

TIME AND MEASURE.

The Accusative answers the questions—

1. How long? (of time.)
2. How long? (of space.)

The Chinese are very fond of the flesh of pigs. Formerly they used to eat the flesh raw, for they were ignorant of the use of fire in cooking. Once a house in a certain city was burnt, and the pigs perished in the flames. Their flesh gave (forth) a very pleasant smell. A boy tasted the flesh, and then said to his friends, 'The fire has made the pigs sweeter.' Then all the inhabitants burned their houses, and ate the flesh of the roasted pigs. At length a certain philosopher said to the citizens, 'My friends, I have an idea in my mind. Cease to burn your houses for the sake of roasted flesh. Perhaps pigs can be roasted without a house. Let us try.' The citizens joyfully roasted a pig without a house; its flesh was very sweet; therefore, from that time, they began to cook the flesh with fire, and ceased to burn their houses together with the pigs.

Exercise 128.

Porsena, the king of the Etrurians, determined to restore the Tarquins ; therefore he came with a large army to Rome. With his first assault he took the hill Janiculum. Never before did so great fear seize the Romans ; they leave their fields ; they fly into the city ; they surround the city itself with forts. One part of the city seemed safe, on account of its walls, another part on account of the Tiber. A bridge nearly gave a road to the enemy. There was a man, Horatius Cocles by name. He had received this name on account of an eye lost in battle. He stood before the bridge, and alone resisted the enemy. Meanwhile the citizens were cutting down the bridge behind him. The bridge being cut, he leapt into the Tiber, and swam across safe to his friends. The state was grateful towards so great valour. Much land was given to him, and his statue was placed in the city.

Exercise 129.

Porsena was besieging the city of Rome. Mucius Scaevola, a brave man, went to the senate and said, 'I will go to the camp of the enemy and kill their king.' Permission having been given, he went to the camp of Porsena. There he stood, in a great crowd, near the king. Pay was then being given to the soldiers, and a clerk in a splendid dress was sitting there. Mucius being deceived by his dress slew him instead of the king. Being placed before the king he thrust his right hand into the fire, saying, 'Perish, right hand ; thou didst not perform thy duty.' The king being astonished liberated him. Then Mucius said, 'O king, three hundred men like me have conspired against thee.' Porsena terrified by these words ceased to fight against the Romans, having received hostages.

Porsena received Cloelia, a noble virgin, among the hostages. His camp was not far from the bank of the Tiber ; therefore Cloelia, having eluded the guards by night, seized a horse, and swam across the Tiber. This was told to king Porsena, and so being angry he sent ambassadors to Rome, saying, 'Restore Cloelia the hostage.' The Romans restored her. Then the king, wondering at the valour of the girl, praised her, and said, 'I will give you part of the hostages.' The hostages having been brought in, Cloelia chose some little girls, and returned with them to her country.

Procas, king of the Albans, had two sons, Numitor and Amulius. He left the kingdom to Numitor, for he was the elder ; but Amulius drove away his brother, and reigned. He determined to deprive Numitor of offspring ; and so he made his daughter, Rhea Sylvia, priestess of Vesta. She, however, gave birth to Romulus and Remus. Amulius threw her into chains, and cast the little boys, placed on a raft, into the Tiber. The stream subsiding left them on dry ground. They relate this story about the boys. A she-wolf, hearing them crying, ran up and licked them with her tongue, and discharged the duty of a mother towards them.

Exercise 133.

The wolf used often to come to the boys as if to her cubs, and so Faustulus, the king's shepherd, perceiving this, took them to his cottage, and gave them to Acca Laurentia, his wife, to be brought up. The boys, growing up among the shepherds, increased their strength by games, and then began to roam over the valleys and mountains, hunting wild beasts, and afterwards to drive away robbers from the herds. Therefore the robbers lay in wait for them. Remus was taken ; but Romulus defended himself. Then Faustulus said to Romulus, 'Numitor is your grandfather, Rhea Silvia your mother.' Romulus at once armed the shepherds and hastened to Alba.

Exercise 134.

Meanwhile the robbers brought Remus to king Amulius, and accused him with these words, 'This youth, O king, plunders the herds of Numitor.' Therefore Remus was surrendered to Numitor for punishment; but Numitor seeing the youth's face, nearly recognised him. For Remus was very like his mother, and his age agreed with the time of their exposure. Meanwhile Romulus arrived suddenly, liberated his brother, and restored Numitor to the throne after killing Amulius.

Exercise 135.

Then Romulus and Remus founded a city in the place of their exposure. But soon a quarrel arose between them. For they said, 'Whether of the two shall give a name to the new city, and be king?' so they used augury. Romulus first saw six vultures, afterwards Remus saw twelve. So Romulus called the city Rome. He wished to rule it by laws, so he said, 'Let no one cross the rampart.' Remus, laughing, leaped over it. Romulus being enraged slew him, saying these words, 'Every one attempting this shall thus perish: my walls are not to be crossed.' So Romulus alone got possession of the throne.

Exercise 136.

Romulus had made rather the outline of a city than a city,—inhabitants were wanting. There was a wood near; this he made a refuge. Thither immediately a number of robbers and shepherds betook themselves. He and his people had no wives. So he sent ambassadors to the neighbouring peoples, saying, 'Give us wives.' The ambassadors were nowhere well received; jests also were added—'Why don't you also open a refuge for women? Such women would be a fit alliance for you.' Romulus dissembling his anger prepared games. Many of the neighbouring people came from the desire of seeing the new city, and especially the Sabines with their children and wives. Suddenly, a signal having been given, the girls were carried off. This at once was the cause of war.

The Sabines took up arms against the Romans on account of the carried-off girls. They found a girl, Tarpeia by name. She had left the city for the sake of drawing water. Her father was in command of the Roman citadel. Titus Tatius, the leader of the Sabines, offered the girl her choice of reward, saying, 'Lead my army into the citadel.' She asked the Sabines for the ornaments of their left hands, that is (to say), their rings and bracelets. These having been promised, Tarpeia led the Sabines into the citadel; then Tatius said to his soldiers, 'Throw your shields on her,' for they had their shields also in their left hands. Thus her wicked treachery was visited by a prompt punishment.

Exercise 138.

Romulus marched against Tatius, and fought with his army. At the first charge, a distinguished man among the Romans, Hostilius by name, fell fighting most bravely. The Romans, terrified by his death, began to fly. Already the Sabines began to shout, 'We have conquered our treacherous hosts, our unwarlike enemies. It is one thing to carry off girls, another to fight with men.' Then Romulus raising his arms to heaven vowed a temple to Jupiter; and his army, either by chance or by the help of the god, halted. And so the battle was renewed, but the carried-off women, with dishevelled hair, dared to come between the flying darts, and, imploring at one time their fathers, at another their husbands, brought about peace.

Romulus made peace with the Sabines, and received them into the city. He chose out of the older men one hundred counsellors. These on account of their old age were called the Senate. He appointed three centuries of horsemen; he distributed the people into thirty curiae. These things having been thus appointed, he was one day reviewing his army, near the Goat's pool. Suddenly there arose a storm with loud thunder, and Romulus was carried off out of sight. A nobleman, Proculus by name, said, and affirmed with an oath, 'I have seen Romulus and talked with him.' He said, 'Let the Romans refrain from dissension and worship virtue.' So Romulus was worshipped as a god, and called Quirinus.

Exercise 140.

In the reign of Tullus Hostilius war broke out between the Romans and the Albans. It seemed good to Hostilius, the king of the Romans, and Fuffetius, the general of the Albans, to intrust the destinies of either people to the hands of a few chosen men. There were three brothers among the Romans, by name Horatii, and also three brothers among the Albans, Curiatii by name. The kings said to them, 'Are you willing to fight for your country?' 'We are willing,' answered they. Then said the kings, 'The conquerors in this combat shall give victory and rule to their own country.' So the brothers take their arms, and advance into the middle between the two armies. The two armies sat down on either side.

The signal is given. The youths rush together with drawn swords. Soon two Romans fell dying, one over the other—the three Albans were wounded. The Alban armies shouted with joy at the misfortune of the Horatii. Hope was already abandoning the Romans. The three Curiatii had surrounded the remaining Horatius. He, though untouched, pretended flight. At length, looking back he saw one of the Curiatii near. He returns against him with a fierce rush and slays him. Then he slays the second. Now one on each side remained, but the body of one was untouched by the sword, and his courage increased by his success. The other was weary from running and from his wounds. The Romans triumphing escort Horatius home. First marched Horatius bearing before him the spoils of the three brothers. His sister met him. She had been betrothed to one of the Curiatii, and seeing his cloak on her brother's shoulders, she began to weep and tear her hair. The fierce youth was enraged on account of the tears of his sister, and so, drawing his sword he ran her through, upbraiding her with these words, 'Be off from hence to your lover, forgetful of your brothers, forgetful of your country! Roman women mourning a foe shall perish thus.'

Exercise 143.

This seemed a horrible deed to the senators and the people ; and so Horatius was condemned to death before the judges. Then Horatius appealed to the people. Meanwhile the father of Horatius kept exclaiming, ' My daughter was rightly slain : look at the spoils of the Curiatii, do not deprive me of the last of my children.' The people could not endure the father's tears, and liberated the youth, more from admiration of his valour than from the right of his cause. However, the father resolved to expiate the crime ; and so he sent his son under a yoke, after completing some sacrifices. Now to go under the yoke was a sign of disgrace.

Peace did not last long, for Fuffetius roused the Veientes against the Romans. Tullus Hostilius drew up his forces. They fought for a long time. Fuffetius being summoned by Tullus to his assistance drew off his forces to a neighbouring hill. Tullus seeing this exclaimed with a loud voice, ' Fuffetius is doing this by my order ; he will surround the enemy.' The Veientes hearing this were terrified and easily conquered. Next day Fuffetius came to the Roman camp. Tullus exclaimed with a loud voice, ' Seize the traitor ; bind him to two four-horsed chariots, and tear him asunder.' This was at once done. Then Tullus destroyed Alba on account of the treachery of its general, and took the Albans with him to Rome.

Tarquinius the Proud had been made king at Rome. For a long time he fought with the neighbouring nations. He took the city of Gabii by the treachery of his son Sextus. Sextus went to Gabii complaining of his father's cruelty towards him. He was kindly received by the citizens, and soon was chosen their leader. Then he sent a messenger to his father, asking, What must I do ? His father did not answer the messenger, but went into the garden, and (while) walking there, followed by the messenger, kept cutting down the heads of the tallest poppies with his stick. At last the messenger being weary returned to Gabii. Sextus understood the matter at once. He slew the chief men of the state, and surrendered the city to his father without any fighting.

The nobleman being astonished again asked him, 'How are you the master of this town?' The other replied, 'I am the master of the boys; the boys are masters of their mothers; the mothers rule the fathers; therefore I am master of the whole town.' The nobleman being greatly pleased with this wise answer said to the schoolmaster, 'I have never met a wiser man than you.'

Distinguish carefully between magister, a (school) master, and dominus, a master.

THE COMPOUND SENTENCE.

- (a.) The Compound Sentence consists of a Principal Sentence with Dependent Clauses.
- (b.) Dependent Clauses are called Substantival, Adjectival, or Adverbial, according as they take the place of a Substantive, Adjective, or Adverb.

ADJECTIVAL CLAUSES.

Verb in the Indicative with Relative words :

Ex. Caesar, qui Gallos vicit, dux fortissimus erat.

Caesar, who conquered the Gauls, was a very brave general.

The Adjectival clause, qui Gallos vicit, takes the place of an adjective, describing Caesar.

Rule for the agreement of the Relative.—The Relative agrees with the Substantive it describes in Number, Gender, and Person; in Case it agrees with its own clause.

If since, although, in order that, such that, is understood in the Relative, the Verb will be in the Subjunctive.

Ex. Legatos misit, qui pacem peterent.

He sent ambassadors who (=in order that they) should ask for peace.

Exercise 151.

Once (when) travelling through Germany I saw a very wonderful thing in an inn. After supper the landlord placed on the floor a large dish of soup. Then with a loud voice he summoned a dog, a cat, an old raven, and a very large rat, who had a bell hung from its neck. These four animals approached the dish and devoured the soup which was in the dish, nor did they disturb each other. Then the dog, the cat, and the rat, lay before the fire, but the raven walked about the room.

Exercise 154.

A certain peasant, who was lying in his bed, sent his daughter into the garden, saying, 'Look at the sun-dial.' The girl soon returned. Her father said, 'What o'clock is it ?' She said, 'I don't know.' The peasant sent her again. The girl, who was ignorant of numbers, took the sun-dial, and brought it to her father, saying, 'Behold ! see (for) yourself.'

what o'clock is it ? what (quotus) hour is it ?

Exercise 155.

In India they hunt tigers in this way : A large number of men are sent armed with sticks. These beat the bushes, in which the tiger is thought to be hid, uttering loud cries. Meanwhile the hunters lie in ambush ; the tiger hearing the noise runs away, and is received by the hunters, who kill it with their weapons. Sometimes the hunters ride on elephants, which advance through the bushes. Sometimes the hunters lie in ambush near the carcass of an ox which has been killed by the tiger.

Exercise 156.

In Ireland are found the snipe and the woodcock. These by night feed on small worms in the marshes, but by day lie hid in the grass and among bushes. The fowler pursues them with dogs, who perceive them by their smell. The dogs, being well taught, stand still. The fowler then approaches. (On) perceiving his approach the birds fly away, but are often struck down by the weapons of the fowler, who at once sends on a dog to bring them to him in his mouth. In this way a great number of these birds is often taken.

to bring them, who may bring them (subj.).

Exercise 157.

The Gauls were once besieging Rome. They determined to attack the citadel. They first sent a soldier, who should seek a path. Then by night, dragging each other (up), they arrived at the top of the hill on which the citadel stood. Not even the dogs heard their approach. Geese, birds sacred to Juno, from which the Romans had abstained in their great want of provisions, were kept in the citadel. The Gauls did not escape the notice of the geese. Manlius, a brave soldier, roused by the cries of the geese, and the flapping of their wings, summoning the rest of the soldiers, hurled down the ascending Gauls.

Exercise 158.

Lysimachus was one of Alexander's generals; a man of noble birth, but by far more distinguished by virtue than by race. Once upon a time Alexander mutilated Callisthenes, a philosopher, in all his limbs, and besides shut him up with a dog in a cage. Lysimachus, who had been wont to listen to the philosopher, and receive from his mouth the precepts of virtue and wisdom, gave him poison as a remedy for his misfortunes. Alexander took this very ill, and said to his soldiers, 'Expose Lysimachus to a lion.' The lion rushed at Lysimachus, who thrust his hand, wrapped in a cloth, into its mouth, and slew the beast by tearing out its tongue. This having been told to the king, astonishment succeeded anger, and he held Lysimachus dearer than before on account of his courage.

Exercise 161.

The frogs are said formerly to have asked a king for themselves from Jupiter. Overcome by their prayers, the god threw down a huge log into the water. The frogs, who were greatly terrified, long remained quiet; but at last, seeing the nature of the new king, they begged for another; but soon, a water-snake having been sent, who killed very many, they repented of their folly. All said, ‘The first king whom we had was better than this one.’

they repented, it repented them.

Exercise 162.

Once Alexander, king of Macedon, invaded Egypt, which had long been subject to the Persians. He remained there a long time, and founded the city of Alexandria, which to this day bears his name. He said, ‘This city which I have founded shall be the capital of my empire.’ Elated with success, he now laid claim to divine honours. Among the very priests were found base persons who flattered him, and said, ‘Thou art the son of Jupiter Ammon.’ He marched to the temple of this god, which was distant a journey of seven days from Alexandria, but many of his soldiers were killed by fatigue and thirst on the road.

Exercise 163.

The birds were waging war with the quadrupeds, and the fortune of war for a long time was doubtful, at one time the former, at another time the latter carrying off the victory. The bat, who preferred safety to honour, used to betake himself to those who had conquered. Among the birds he used to say, 'I am a bird;' among the quadrupeds he used to say, 'I am a mouse.' When the birds and quadrupeds had made peace the deceit was evident to both. Therefore, being condemned by both, he escaped, and from that time used only to fly by night.

at one time—at another, nunc—nunc. was evident, appeared.

Exercise 164.

Octavianus brought assistance to Brutus, who was being besieged by Antonius at Mutina. He was not able to approach the city, for Antonius held all the approaches. Therefore, wishing to inform Brutus of everything, he at first sent letters written on leaden plates, which were carried by a diver under the water of the river; he afterwards used pigeons for this (purpose), which he used to keep for a long time without food; then he used to tie letters to their necks, and let them go from a place near the walls. The pigeons, eager for food, used to make for the highest buildings, and were then taken by Brutus.

Exercise 168.

A woman had a bird which she used to allow to come out of its cage daily. Once the bird was eating crumbs of bread. Her cat, who always before had shown great kindness towards the bird, suddenly seized it, and jumped, holding it in its mouth, on to a table. The woman was greatly frightened on account of this, but soon saw the cause of the deed. Another cat had just come into the room through the door, which was open. She drove the stranger away, and her own cat then came down from the table, and replaced the bird in safety.

came down, descended. in safety, safe.

Exercise 169.

A few years ago an elephant in India killed its master with a blow of its trunk. The man's wife, who had seen this dreadful thing, took her two children, and threw them before the feet of the enraged animal, saying, 'Thou hast slain my husband ; kill me also, and my children.' The elephant at once stopped, and as if moved with remorse, took up the eldest boy with its trunk, and placed him on its neck. The animal, which had killed its master, adopted the boy in his place, and never afterwards allowed any other person to mount it.

Exercise 173.

Hannibal was once besieging a Roman city. The inhabitants had no food; therefore a Roman general who was not far distant filled many jars with corn, and threw them into the river, which flowed beside the city. He also sent a messenger to say, 'Take up the jars which the river is bringing down.' The following night the jars were brought down by the river. The corn was equally divided among all the inhabitants; the same thing was done next day. Hannibal, having detected the affair, threw chains across the river, and intercepted the jars. Then the Romans threw nuts into the river, which were carried down to the city, and taken up by the inhabitants with baskets. By this provision their want was lessened.

to say, who should say. the affair, the thing.

Exercise 174.

M. Regulus, who had been made consul, was the first Roman general to cross over into Africa. He took the city of Clypea and many forts; and he fought not only with men but also with beasts. A snake which lived near a river attacked the Roman army; it seized many soldiers with its huge mouth; it crushed others with blows of its tail, and slew some with its pestilential breath. Nor could it be pierced by the darts which the Romans used. At length it was destroyed by stones, which the Romans hurled with huge catapults. It infected the river and the neighbouring country with its blood. Regulus was obliged to move his camp. He sent its skin, which was 120 feet in length, to Rome.

ADVERBIAL CLAUSES.

Adverbial Clauses take the place of Adverbs ; that is to say, they show when, why, or how a thing is done.

They are introduced by Conjunctions.

- (a.) Some of these require the Subjunctive ; as, ut (that), quin, ne, quo (=ut when there is a comparative in the sentence), quominus (by which the less), quum (since), dum (provided that), licet, quamvis, ut (although), tanquam, velut, ceu, quasi (as if).
- (b.) All others usually require the Indicative.

The following require the Subjunctive, if the action is not completed :—

Dum, donec, quoad (until) ; antequam, priusquam, si, nisi, etsi, etiamsi.

Ex. Hoc faciam priusquam huc veniam.
I shall do this before I come hither.

Quum (when) takes the Subjunctive of the Imperfect and Pluperfect tenses ; the Indicative of the other tenses.

- (c.) The following Conjunctions do not introduce Adverbial Clauses ; they merely join words or sentences without influencing Mood :

et, que, ac, atque, aut, vel, ve, sed, autem, nam, enim.

SEQUENCE OF TENSES.

In Dependent Clauses, the Tense of the Subjunctive is regulated by the Tense of the Verb on which it depends.

RULE.—Primary Tenses are followed by Primary,
 Historic Tenses are followed by Historic.

So—

Historic	$\left\{ \begin{array}{l} \text{Imperfect} \\ \text{Aorist} \\ \text{Pluperfect} \end{array} \right\}$	are followed by	$\left\{ \begin{array}{l} \text{Imperfect (of same time).} \\ \text{Pluperfect (of time before).} \end{array} \right\}$

Ex. Venio ut te videam, I come to see you.
 Veni ut te viderem, I came to see you.

As there is no Future Subjunctive in Latin, the want of it is supplied by the Future Participle of the Verb conjugated with Sim after Primary Tenses.

Essem after Historic Tenses.

Exercise 176.

There were once two very celebrated painters, one of whom was called Zeuxis, the other Parrhasius. Zeuxis had painted grapes, and had so imitated nature that birds flew to the picture, as if the grapes were real. Then Parrhasius brought a picture on which he had painted a cloth. Since Parrhasius seemed to delay, Zeuxis being deceived said, 'Take away the cloth, that I may see the picture.' Then when he understood his mistake, he conferred the prize on Parrhasius, saying, 'I have deceived birds : thou hast deceived me.'

Exercise 180.

Scipio, while still a youth, saved his father by his great courage. For when he had been severely wounded in a battle (fought) against Hannibal, and was almost in the hands of the enemy, his son opposed himself to the advancing Carthaginians, and saved his father from danger. This dutiful deed won the favour of the people for Scipio when a candidate for the aedileship. When the tribunes of the people said, 'The youth has not yet reached the lawful age,' Scipio replied, 'If the Romans wish to make me aedile, I am old enough.' He was received with so great applause that the tribune desisted from their attempt.

M. Brutus, descended from the man who had expelled the Tarquins from Rome, learned oratory at Rhodes. He was distinguished on account of his virtue. His father had been put to death by the order of Pompeius; yet in the civil war he followed Pompeius because his cause seemed the juster, and preferred the advantage of the republic to his own grief. When Pompeius was defeated, Caesar pardoned Brutus, and even made him praetor. Afterwards, when Caesar seemed to despise the authority of the city, and to wish to be king, the people desired a champion of liberty. Some one wrote under the statue of the first Brutus, 'Would that you were alive!' Also under the statue of Caesar was written, 'Brutus was made the first consul because he expelled the kings; this man was made king because he expelled the consuls.' There was also written on the tribunal of M. Brutus, 'Thou sleepest, O Brutus.'

Exercise 193.

War had been declared against the Tarentines, who had offered an insult to the Roman ambassador. Pyrrhus, king of Epirus, came to their assistance. The consul Laevinus was sent against Pyrrhus. When he had taken some of the king's scouts, he led them round the Roman camp, and then dismissed them in safety, (in order) that they might tell Pyrrhus everything which they had seen. The battle soon began. When his troops were already retreating, Pyrrhus led his elephants against the Romans; then the fortune of the battle was changed. The bulk of their huge bodies terrified the Romans; the horses also, terrified at the sight and smell of the beasts, betook themselves to flight. Night made an end of the battle.

to their assistance, for an assistance to them. in safety, safe.

Exercise 194.

Pyrrhus held the Roman prisoners in the highest honour; and seeing the slain lying with their wounds in front and with faces fierce even in death, he is said to have used these words—'With such men I should have conquered the whole world in a short time.' Then he hastens towards the city of Rome by forced marches; he lays waste all things with fire and sword; he pitches his camp near the twentieth milestone from the city. Laevinus came to meet Pyrrhus with a new army. Seeing this, the king said, 'I have the same luck against the Romans which Hercules had against the Hydra, to whom as many heads arose as had been cut off.' Then he retired into Campania. He dismissed the Roman prisoners without a ransom, in order that the Romans, already knowing his courage, might also recognise his generosity.

Exercise 195.

C. Fabricius was one of the ambassadors who had come to Pyrrhus to speak about the captives. When Pyrrhus heard his name praised among the Romans as of a good and brave but poor man, he honoured him greatly, and sent him gifts and gold. Fabricius refused everything. Next day Pyrrhus, wishing to frighten him by a sudden sight of an elephant, said to his servants, 'Let the beast be placed close to Fabricius behind a curtain.' When this was done, at a given signal, the curtain being removed, the beast suddenly uttered a fearful scream, and hung its trunk over Fabricius' head. But he smiled gently, and said to Pyrrhus, 'Your beast does not move me to-day more than your gold did yesterday.'

Exercise 196.

Pyrrhus, admiring the courage of Fabricius, addressed him in these words—'Desert your country and live with me; if you are willing to do this, I will give you a fourth part of my kingdom.' Fabricius replied, 'If you consider me a good man, why do you wish to corrupt me? but if a bad one, why do you want to have me?' Next year, all hope of peace having been taken away, Fabricius was made consul, and sent against Pyrrhus. Since the camps were near each other, the king's physician came by night to Fabricius, and said, 'If you are willing to give me a reward, I am prepared to kill Pyrrhus by poison.' Fabricius immediately sent him bound to the king, with a letter to tell of his baseness. Then the king is said to have remarked, 'It is easier to move the sun from his course than Fabricius from honour.'

Exercise 197.

They fought for a long time. At last Manius Curius, who had been made consul, defeated the army of Pyrrhus, and triumphed over that king. Four elephants, with their howdahs, then seen at Rome for the first time, rendered his triumph remarkable. The conquered king returned to Epirus, leaving a garrison at Tarentum. Therefore, since he was thought sure to renew the war, Curius was again made consul; but the unexpected death of the king freed the Romans from fear. For Pyrrhus, while besieging the city of Argos, was slain by a woman, who hurled a tile from the roof of the house on which she was standing on to his head.

Exercise 198.

War was declared against the French by Edward III., king of England. Therefore, when he had landed a large army in France, he marched against the king of the French. The two armies pitched their camps near a village. Next day the French drew up their line of battle, nor did the English refuse the contest. The son of Edward, who was called the Black Prince, commanded part of the army. Suddenly a storm arose, which injured the French greatly, for the rain softened their bows. The English had covered their bows, and received no injury. The French archers could not use their bows well, and were routed by the English, who, having discharged their arrows from a distance, then attacked them at close quarters. Edward, who was unwilling to assist his son, lest he should lose the glory of the victory, said, 'Let my son finish what he has so well begun.' The French were defeated with great slaughter, and their king was taken.

Hannibal got possession of the city of Tarentum by treachery. Thirteen young nobles among the Tarentines conspired against their country. They having gone out of the city by night, under pretence of hunting, came to Hannibal, whose camp was not far distant. Hannibal praised them, and said, '(When) returning to the city, drive the cattle of the Carthaginians towards the gates, and give part of the spoil to the guards.' This was often done; and soon the gates used to be opened whenever the youths gave the signal. Then Hannibal with ten thousand men followed them by night. When they approached the gate the youths aroused the guards. The gates were opened; the youths entered, bringing with them a wild boar of huge size. The unsuspecting sentinel, (while) admiring the huge beast, was slain. Then the Carthaginians rushed in, and after slaying the remaining guards, got possession of the city.

SUBSTANTIVAL CLAUSES.

Substantival Clauses (Oratio Obliqua, Indirect Speech) take the place of a Substantive, either as subject of an Impersonal Verb, or object of a Transitive Verb.

They are divided into—

- (1.) INDIRECT STATEMENT,—Accusative with Infinitive, after Verbs of saying, perceiving, thinking, hoping, promising :—

Ex. Dixit se civem Romanum esse.
He said that he was a Roman citizen.

This is the usual construction ; there are some exceptions.

- (2.) INDIRECT COMMAND,—Ut, ne, with Subjunctive, after Verbs of commanding, forbidding, entreating, persuading :—

Ex. Imperavit ei ut abiret.
He ordered him to depart.

Iubeo (order), veto (forbid), prefer the Infinitive Construction.

- (3.) INDIRECT QUESTION,—Interrogative Words, with Subjunctive, after Verbs of asking, doubting, and telling :—

Ex. Quaerit ex nobis quid agamus.
He asks us what we are doing.

Observe that the Simple Sentences become Substantival Clauses when made to depend on another Verb.

Adjectival and Adverbial Clauses, qualifying words in Substantival Clauses, take the Subjunctive, unless they are introduced as explanatory notes by the author.

Exercise 201.

A very wise man was reading in his room, when his servant came to him greatly alarmed, and said that the house was on fire. 'Go,' said his master, 'and tell my wife. This does not concern me, for I never take any notice of domestic affairs.'

Jupiter had spoken in a dream to a certain man, Titus by name, and said, 'Go and order the consuls to repeat the games, for some one danced lately in the games whom I liked not, therefore great danger awaits this city.' But Titus feared lest every one would laugh at him, if he should go to the consuls with such a message, and so he did not obey the god. A few days after his son died, and again a voice said to him, 'Dost thou still despise my orders? Thy son is already dead, and if thou wilt not obey, worse disaster awaits thee.'

every one, all. wilt not, nolo.

Exercise 240.

But Titus still lingered, so he was himself seized with a sudden weakness; neither could he walk, but his friends carried him in a litter. Then he delayed no longer, but ordered his relations to carry him to the consuls. Then he told the consuls the orders of the god, and all the things that had happened to him. When they had heard this, the consuls remembered that on the first day of the games a citizen had beaten his slave with a whip in the midst of the circus; and the citizens noticed it not, but Jupiter saw it and was angry; for it was a holy day, and a day suited for mirth, but not for tears and pain.

Exercise 241.

The Helvetii, whom Orgetorix had persuaded to seek more fertile regions, on hearing that Caesar had suddenly arrived at Geneva, asked him to allow them to pass through the Roman province, promising to do no injury. Caesar, who as yet had only a small army, said that he would soon be able to reply; let the ambassadors of the Helvetii return to him after a few days. Meanwhile Caesar, having collected a great army, said that he would not allow them to pass; (and) that, if they attempted to go, he would prevent them by force.

on hearing, when they had heard. to allow, indirect command.
to do, that they would do. Verbs of hoping and promising take the fut. inf. let—return, indirect command.

Exercise 242.

Hannibal being conquered by Scipio, fled to Antiochus, king of Syria. Ambassadors were sent from Rome to Antiochus, among whom was Scipio, who asked Hannibal whom he thought to be the greatest general. Hannibal replied, that Alexander king of Macedon seemed to him to have been the greatest, because with small forces he had routed innumerable armies. Then Scipio asked whom he placed second. 'Pyrrhus,' said he, 'because he first taught (how) to measure (out) a camp, and no one could better choose ground, or place guards.' Again, when Scipio asked whom he placed third, he replied, 'Myself.' Then Scipio, smiling, said, 'What then would you say if you had conquered me?' 'I should have placed myself before Alexander and Pyrrhus and all others.'

he thought, indirect question. he had routed, subjunctive, because of the

Exercise 243.

Two men were once brought before a judge ; the one seemed to be a tailor, with his shears in his hand, the other a peasant. Then the tailor spoke as follows : ' This man came to me yesterday and showed me a cloth, asking whether there was enough to make him a cap. " There is enough," said I. Then he asked was there enough for two. Seeing his meanness I said, " Certainly." So at last he ordered five caps to be made, which I finished according to his order. To-day, he will not pay me the money.' ' Thou speakest the truth,' said the peasant, ' but show the caps to the judge.' Then the tailor drew forth his hand from his bosom, and showed his four fingers and thumb, from each of which hung a very little cap. ' Here are the five caps,' said he, ' which the man ordered ; nothing remains over of the cloth.' All began to laugh, but the judge said, ' Let the tailor lose his trouble, the peasant his cloth, and let the caps be given to the poor.'

a cap to be made (gerundive).

Exercise 244.

After the battle of Cannae, when his troops were congratulating Hannibal, and advising him to take some rest himself, and give some to his weary troops, one of his officers, by name Maharbal, urged him to start for Rome at once, since he was sure to feast in the Capitol as victor within five days. When Hannibal rejected this advice, Maharbal said, ' You know (how) to conquer, Hannibal, but you do not know how to use victory.' The delay of this day is believed to have saved the city.

some rest, something of rest. to start, indirect command.
sure to feast, future participle.

Exercise 245.

Next day, at dawn, the Carthaginians began to collect the spoil. So many thousands of the Romans lay on the field, that three bushels of the rings which had been taken from the fingers of the knights and senators were sent to Carthage. Then Hannibal led his troops into Campania, where he himself and his troops, given up to ease, became less fit for war. It is well known that he ought to have gone to Rome at once, for meanwhile the Romans enrolled fresh forces, and fortified the city.

at dawn, at first light. ought, it behooved him, perf. inf.

Exercise 246.

Regulus was conquered by the Carthaginians under the leadership of Xanthippus. Only two thousand men remained out of the whole Roman army. Regulus himself was captured and thrown into prison. Afterwards he was sent to Rome to consult about an exchange of prisoners, after giving an oath that he would return to Carthage if he did not effect his object. When he had arrived at Rome, he explained his orders before the senate, but said that he was no longer a senator, since he had fallen into the power of the enemy. Being ordered however to give his opinion, he said that the Carthaginian prisoners ought not to be restored, since they were youths, but he himself was worn out with old age. The captives were therefore, on his recommendation, retained. Then Regulus returned to Carthage, although he knew that he was going to a most cruel enemy and dreadful punishment, for he thought his oath should be kept. It is well known that he was put to death at Carthage with every kind of torment.

Exercise 247.

Marcus Brutus, knowing the wish of the Roman people, conspired against Caesar. Porcia, his wife, being aware of his plan, wounded herself with a knife, as if by accident. Brutus was summoned to his wife's chamber by the shrieks of the maids. Porcia said to him secretly, 'I did not wound myself by accident, but on purpose, my dear Brutus; for I wished to try whether I had enough courage to meet death, if your plan did not succeed.' Hearing these words, Brutus is said to have raised his hands and eyes to heaven, and to have exclaimed, 'Would that I could seem worthy of such a wife!'

to meet, that I might meet.
hearing these words, these words having been heard.

Exercise 248.

Octavianus fought in a naval battle with Antonius off Actium, which is a place in Epirus; he conquered Antonius and pursued him to Egypt, and having besieged Alexandria, whither Antonius and Cleopatra had betaken themselves, he got possession of it in a short time. Then Antonius, having taken his seat on the royal throne crowned with the diadem, killed himself with his sword. But Cleopatra, whom Octavianus greatly desired to be taken alive, and kept for his triumph, ordered a snake to be brought to her in a basket among some figs, and with her own hand applied it to her arm. When Octavianus heard this, he ordered the physicians to apply remedies to the wound. The physicians used all their arts in vain; Cleopatra soon died. She was then buried together with Antonius.

which, to agree with 'a place,' instead of with Actium, its antecedent; this is called attraction. having taken his seat, when he had sat.

Exercise 249.

When Augustus was entering Rome, after the war with Antonius, a certain artisan met him, among those who were congratulating him, carrying a raven, which he had taught to say these words: 'Hail, victorious Caesar, Emperor.' Augustus wondering at the bird bought it for a large price. The companion of the artisan, who had received nothing, told Augustus, that the latter had also another raven, which he begged might be produced. The raven being brought, uttered the words which it had learnt, 'Hail, victorious Antonius, Emperor.' Augustus only laughed, and ordered the teacher of the ravens to divide his reward with his companion. He is also said to have bought a parrot, which had in like manner saluted him.

the latter, hic. might be produced, indirect command.

Exercise 250.

Incited by this example, a certain cobbler trained a raven to a like salutation, but since it learned slowly, he used often to say to the bird, 'My trouble and expense is lost.' At length the raven began to produce the desired salutation, hearing which, while passing by, Augustus replied, 'I have enough of such saluters at home.' Then the raven added those words, with which it was wont to hear its master complaining, 'My trouble and expense is lost.' At this Augustus laughed, and ordered the bird to be bought at a very great price.

passing, he passes by.

Exercise 251.

The brother of a very celebrated actor used to ask daily, 'Did my dear brother want me?' At last the actor died. Soon afterwards his brother died also. Some asked why he had died so soon after the death of his brother. It was answered, 'that his brother wanted him.'

did my brother want? was there need (opus) to my brother?

Exercise 252.

They say that bears use wonderful stratagems in order to catch deer, for they are not able to catch them by running, since they are much swifter. The deer love to feed at the bottom of mountains. The bear pursues them by scent until he sees them. They say that he then ascends the rocks cautiously, and when he has arrived at the summit, that he pushes down rocks at them. Sometimes one of the deer is wounded by the rock, and then the bear descends and seizes it.

Exercise 253.

Greece was saved by one man—Themistocles. The generals of the other Grecian states admitted this, when they assembled to assign the prizes of wisdom and valour. Upon the altar of Poseidon at Corinth each general placed a ticket, on which was written the names of those whom he considered worthy of the first and second prizes. But vanity and love of self were defeated in this. Each commander had written that he was worthy of the first prize; but the greater part had said that Themistocles was worthy of the second. Themistocles also received from the Spartans splendid prizes. He was presented with a crown, and the most splendid chariot which the city could afford.

Exercise 254.

Quintus Fabius, in his old age, was an officer in the army of his son, who had been made consul. When he was coming into camp his son went out to meet him; twelve lictors, according to custom, preceded him. The old man was riding on horseback, nor did he dismount from his horse at the approach of the consul. Already eleven lictors had passed by in silence. When the consul had perceived this, he ordered the last lictor to call to his father Fabius, to dismount from his horse. Fabius, then dismounting, said, 'I did not despise your authority, my son, but I wished to see if you knew (how) to act the consul.'

Exercise 255.

Menenius Agrippa restored concord between the patricians and the people. For when the people revolted from the patricians, Agrippa, an eloquent man, was sent to the people. Being brought into their camp, he is said to have spoken thus: 'Once upon a time the limbs, since they saw the belly idle, revolted from it, and conspired that the hands should not bring food to the mouth, and that the teeth should not chew the food. But, while they tried to overcome the belly, they themselves became weak, and the whole body became ill. Hence it appeared that the belly was of use, and that it sent the food through all the limbs; therefore the revolt ceased.' The senate and the people then made peace, and returned to the city.

that—not, ne. and that not, neu. of use, for a use.

Exercise 256.

Hannibal, the admiral of the Carthaginian fleet, leaped into a boat and escaped from the hands of the Romans. Fearing, however, lest he should suffer punishment for the loss of the fleet, he sent one of his friends to Carthage before the news of the disaster had reached home. He, entering the senate-house, said, 'Hannibal asks you, should he fight with the Romans?' The whole senate exclaimed, 'There is no doubt but that he should fight!' Then said he, 'He did so, and was conquered.' So they were not able to condemn him, because they had ordered him to fight. Thus Hannibal escaped the penalty of the gallows, for with this kind of punishment a defeated general was visited among the Carthaginians.

Exercise 257.

Antisthenes used to exhort his disciples to pay attention to wisdom. Few obeyed him ; therefore he dismissed them all. Among these was Diogenes ; and when he, stirred with great desire for learning, used to keep coming to Antisthenes, and would not go away, Antisthenes at length threatened that he would beat his head with the stick which he used to carry in his hand. Diogenes did not go away, but said, 'Strike if you wish ; I will offer you my head. You will not find a stick so hard as to drive me away from your school.' It is well known that Antisthenes at length admitted a pupil so desirous of learning, and loved him greatly.

Exercise 258.

Phocion, when condemned to death, bore himself bravely. When some wretched man spat on him while going to prison, 'Will no one,' said he, 'check this fellow's indecency?' To one who asked him whether he had any message to leave to his son Phocus, he answered, 'Let him not be angry with the Athenians.' And when the hemlock which had been prepared seemed to be insufficient for all the condemned, and the jailer said that he would not give more unless money was paid to him ; 'Give the man his money,' said Phocion to one of his friends, 'since at Athens one cannot even die without money.'

Exercise 259.

The king prepared a large fleet, for he had determined to prevent the enemy from assisting the city which he intended to besiege. Then he ordered a fort to be built, by which he hoped to guard the approaches of the harbour. After losing much money and time, the fort seemed to be so badly built that he was obliged to abandon it ; and though he had collected a large army, he was not able to effect anything great. He indeed made an incursion into the region which used to give supplies to the garrison of the city, and laid it waste with fire and sword. One of his knights was wounded in a wonderful way. A lance struck his head between his eye and nose ; and although the lance was broken and the head of it remained in the wound, he was not thrown from his horse by so violent a wound, and the head of the lance being extracted by a skilful surgeon, he afterwards was cured.

Exercise 260.

As Polycarp stood in the theatre at Smyrna, the multitude around him crying out that he despised the gods, the Roman proconsul, pitying his old age, begged him to pronounce the words which should show that he trusted the old gods and abhorred the Christian faith. 'Swear by the fortune of Caesar ; cry, Death to those who do not believe that there are gods.' Those who tell the story of his death say that Polycarp, on hearing this, looked with a severe countenance at the crowd who were filling the theatre with their voices, and casting up his eyes to heaven, said, 'Death to those who do not believe there is a God.' Thus he said the one thing but omitted the other. The Romans took it ill, and he was burnt.

Exercise 261.

A peasant on the point of death, since he was not able to leave riches to his sons, desired to rouse their minds to the desire of diligent cultivation of the fields and to earnest labour. He therefore summoned them to him and addressed them thus, 'My sons, you see how my property stands ; but you must seek in my vineyard the money which I have saved during my life.' After saying this the old man died. The sons, thinking that their father had hidden a treasure in the vineyard, take their spades, and dig up the whole soil of the vineyard. They indeed find no treasure, but by digging the soil they made it so fertile that the vines bore fruit most abundantly.

Tyler, having ordered his companions to retire until he should give them a signal, dared to come into the midst of the king's attendants. He then behaved in such a way that the mayor of the city was not able to bear his impertinence. He drew his sword and struck him so heavily that he fell on the ground, where he was immediately despatched by the soldiers. The conspirators, seeing the death of their leader, determined to revenge themselves ; and the soldiers with the king would have been killed immediately, unless the king had seen what ought to be done. He ordered his companions to stop ; he advanced alone towards the angry crowd, and addressing them with a kind and fearless countenance, asked them why they had made such a tumult. 'Are you angry, my friends,' said he, 'because you have lost your leader ? I am your king : I will be your leader.'

When the Gauls had pitched their camp near the river, the Roman army set out from the city and halted on the near side of the river. A Gaul of huge stature advanced to the middle of the bridge, and exclaimed with a loud voice, Will any Roman fight with me, that the result may show which nation is best in war? For a long time there was silence among the Roman chiefs. Then Titus Manlius approached the general and said, 'If you allow me, I wish to show this beast that I am descended from the family which hurled the Gauls from the Tarpeian rock.' To whom the general replied, 'I give you permission; advance and fight bravely for your country.'

Then his companions arm the youth. He takes his shield and sword. The Gaul awaited him joyfully, sticking out his tongue in mockery. When they stood between the two lines of battle the Gaul struck the shield of Manlius with his sword with a loud noise. But Manlius thrust himself between the arms and body of the Gaul, and pierced him with his sword. From him as he lay he took his collar, which he put round his own neck. The Romans joyfully received their soldier, and brought him to the general. It is well known that Manlius received the name of Torquatus on account of this exploit.

Exercise 265.

The same Manlius, being afterwards made consul, in the Latin war, in order to restore military discipline, ordered that no one should leave his station to fight. By chance his son had approached the camp of the enemy; he who commanded the Latin cavalry, when he recognised the consul's son, said, 'Will you fight with me, that the result may show how much a Latin horseman excels a Roman?' Forgetful of the general's order, the youth rushes to the conflict, and slays the Latin. Having collected the spoils, he returns to his father. The consul at once summons the troops with the trumpet; then he addresses his son as follows: 'Since thou, my son, hast not obeyed the order of the consul, it behoves you to restore discipline by punishment. Go, lictor, bind him to the stake.' His head was then cut off by the lictor with an axe. It is well known that only the old men went out to meet Manlius when he was returning home; he was always afterwards hated by the youth.

Exercise 266.

There was at Corinth a great quantity of statues and valuable pictures, with which Mummius, the Roman general, after the capture of Corinth, filled Rome and the whole of Italy, but took nothing to his own house. Mummius, however, was so ignorant of these things, that when he sent the pictures to Rome he warned the sailors that, if they lost them, they would have to restore new ones. One of the pictures, the work of a celebrated painter, was used by some soldiers who were playing hazard, for a board. This picture, when the plunder was being sold, was bought by king Attalus for a large price. Mummius wondering at the price, ordered it to be sent to Rome.

When the two armies stood ready, and were just going to begin the battle, a hind came running down from the mountains between the lines of battle, with a she-wolf in chase of her. She ran in among the ranks of the Gauls, who transfixed her with their javelins. But the she-wolf ran towards the Romans, who immediately made way for her, thinking that this was the beast which had fed with its milk the founder of their city, and whose image they had set up the year before under the very fig-tree where, as it had been related, the miracle had been. 'See,' cried one of the soldiers, 'the barbarians have slain Diana's sacred hind, and she will punish them; but the Roman she-wolf, unhurt by spear or sword, gives us a good omen of victory, and orders us to remember Mars and our founder Romulus.' So the Roman soldiers, encouraged as if by a sign from the gods, attacked the enemy joyfully.

In Italy there was a physician who used to receive lunatics into his house, and in order to cure them used to order them to stand in a pond, some up to the knees, others up to the chin, in proportion to their madness. One of these lunatics, who was pretty well recovered, was standing one day at the door of the house, and seeing a huntsman ride by with his hawks and hounds, he asked him what he was going to do. The huntsman answered, 'I am going to hunt.' 'At what price do you value the animals which you catch in a year?' asked the lunatic. 'About two hundred pence,' replied the huntsman. 'And what is the cost of your horse, dogs, and hawks?' 'About two thousand pence,' answered the other. On hearing this, the lunatic besought the huntsman to go away as quickly as possible if he valued his liberty highly, and said that the physician would compel him to stand in the pond up to his chin if he found him there.

Among the friends of Augustus was Mecnas, a Roman knight, whom he loved greatly, and who always so used the favour he had with the Emperor as to benefit all whom he could, and injure no one. His skill was very great in softening the temper of Augustus when he saw him incited by anger. Augustus was once pronouncing justice, and seemed likely to condemn many men to death. Mecnas, who was present, tried to approach the Emperor through the crowd; being unable to do this, he wrote on a tablet these words, 'Rise, I pray, butcher,' and threw the tablet to Augustus. When he had read it, Augustus at once stood up, and no one was condemned to death.

Exercise 270.

Lucilius was held by all so wise, that if any one had anything to ask he always consulted him, and often gave large sums of money that he might be admitted. Once there came a stranger, who said he was cleverer than any one else, and promised that if a large reward were given to the conqueror, he would engage with Lucilius in a contest of wisdom. Lucilius won easily in the following way. He told the stranger that a worm once climbed up a stalk ten feet high. It moved so slowly that each day it only ascended three feet, and slipped down two feet at night. The stranger said, 'Each day it is higher by one foot than the day before.' 'Certainly,' said Lucilius, 'but in how many days will it arrive at the top of the stalk?' 'In ten days,' said the stranger. Then Lucilius said, 'In seven days it has climbed seven feet, and since it ascends three feet daily, can you deny that it reaches the top of the stalk on the eighth day?' The stranger paid the money and departed.
